

β'

Mr. Gorsky woke up very, very ordinary.
He woke up not thinking about anything. He knew that the alarm clock was ringing, because it was time for work.
As he was pressing the device to shut up
he pushed the glass of water which began spilling.
Gorsky made himself ready, had breakfast and left for the office.
There he saw a woman and this was her first day in the company.
Then they got married.
At noon they went to lunch together.
Then they had children.
The first ten years they loved each other very much.
Then Mr. Gorsky got promoted.
The children grew up.
Finally, he and his wife got used to it.
They had tea in the afternoon.
Gorsky and his wife retired.
In the evening she cooked in the new kitchen, and he lit candles.
During the night Mr. Gorsky died.

There was much sorrow and tears. Also consolations.
There were certain people who poured out from their glasses to the ground, saying: "Rest in peace!"