INTRODUCTION

Dear readers,

this is a book of changes.

But not in the sense of a chronicle of our time, nor is it a new system of wise divinations such as I Ching, although the divinations will be brief.

This is a book of changes, because the main character is constantly changing.

He would appear to be at more than one location at the same time, although the contrary is also possible for him: being at the same place at different times, seemingly as different people.

The main character of the book, however, is approximately one.

Back in Ancient China, people said that the only constant thing in the Universe is change. Or maybe they said so in Ancient Greece? Or perhaps - in India ...

Thracians, on their turn, thought that only a truly stupid person may decide to keep in an unchanging form something as volatile as thought and language - and therefore left the writing to their more naïve southern neighbours, the Greeks.

- The change is... - asked the teacher ten years before.

- The change is. - said the student ten years after and became a teacher himself.

This is a book that, when completed, will be possible to read from front to back, from back to front or from the middle - to somewhere.

Can one stay without stories about change? Can one not talk about it?

What is sure about change is that it has many eyes and many ears and anything you say or think about it, may be used one day.

Silence and denial to think, on the other hand, are also used.

So - if you have come to this line - you have no other rational choice but to begin creating.

Congratulations.

No one is in position to say how long this book will change.
